60 Minutes crew with Dereck and Beverly Joubert after an exciting shoot in the Selinda Reserve.

Dereck Joubert on location in Duba Plains with Lara Logan of 60 Minutes.

Lara Logan and a team from CBS 60 Minutes profiled filmmakers Dereck and Beverly Joubert at their Great Plains Conservation camps in Botswana's Selinda Reserve, staying at Duba Plains, Zarafa and Selinda camps. Logan was in Africa to film the Jouberts' important conservation work with Big Cats in the Duba Plains area, scheduled to air on Sunday November 25, 2012 at 7:00 p.m. ET/PT.

The enduring message from the Jouberts is: “Without big cats, African safaris and African ecosystems will be much poorer.”

60 Minutes and the Jouberts were on a quest to film and follow the wildlife characters from their 2011 award-winning feature, “The Last Lions,” released by National Geographic Entertainment.

Great Plains Conservation transported the TV crew and South African correspondent Logan across swollen rivers at Duba Plains to the luxury of Zarafa Camp and Selinda Camp, and flew the film crew through storms while enduring the heat in the Okavango Delta.

60 Minutes is the longest standing network magazine and news program in the USA, with a loyal viewership of over 30 million weekly.

Dereck and Beverly Joubert founded The Big Cats Initiative with the National Geographic Society in 2009. The Jouberts are partners in Great Plains Conservation.
